Unexpected Turns, Thrills and Chills

How it works

The central screen is turned to face one contestant, so the other two can't see the question being shown. Every question has an objective answer. Each contestant plays three times during each segment.

In the first segment, the contestant chooses between answering the question and passing it on to one of the opponents. A player who gets an answer right earns 5 points, but if the question was passed on to another contestant who gets it wrong, the player earns 10 points.

In the second segment, the player is not allowed to answer their question. They must choose one of the opponents to answer it. The contestant who gets it right earns 15 points; if they don't, the contestant who passed them the question earns 20 points.

In the third segment, the contestants go mano a mano. Without knowing the question, because the screen is facing the opponent, the player must choose between answering or passing it on. If the player gets it right they earn 20 points; if they pass it on and the opponent gets it wrong, they earn 30 points.

In the last round of the third segment, if a contestant has no chance to earn enough points to win the game, they'll be eliminated. But if all three have a chance to win the game, the winner will only be revealed after the last question – and it could be any of them!

A TEASER

Our host is actually a teaser.

He'll corner the contestants, make them uptight, screw it out of them. Their comfort zone is somewhere outside! Here, he will put the contestants to the test!
